

Hello.

I'm writing to suggest myself as a possible team member for the CCE Review. Probably, the simplest introduction to me are the following two articles from yesterday's Times:

<http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/news/uk/article7028418.ece>

<http://www.timesonline.co.uk/tol/news/environment/article7028362.ece>

(Ignore the inflammatory headlines: I did not write them)

My academic background is that I have a BA in Mathematics and Computation from Oxford followed up by a DPhil in Computer Security (also from Oxford). I've spent my career in the computer software industry in a variety of roles in the UK, France and the US. I am also known within the 'skeptic' community as an independent mind. I believe my inclusion would go a long way to making people within that world believe that the review was not a foregone conclusion. I have no links to IPCC, CRU, the energy industry, ... On my blog I've been critical of the way climate skeptics behave, as well as looking with a critical eye at Met Office data.

I do not know exactly what role I could play, but please take this email as an offer of assistance.

Sincerely,
John.
