

Dear Sirs

I am not a scientist, I am not a climate specialist, I am not biased in this argument regarding global warming.

I am very conversant with computer technology however. When I read the leaked emails last year I was both amazed and fascinated at the scope of task involved developing a computer model which, at this point will never be a reliable factor in assessing the theory of climate change from the millions of the variables available.

Having now followed this saga very closely I can see no reason why Professor Boulton should remain on your panel of inquiry when one looks at the numerous statements he has made supporting the theory. His statements on this site are sounding very dubious in the light of his previous utterings.

He should go now along with Dr Campbell who has resigned, otherwise any findings will be tainted.

It has to be an enquiry without a hint of bias as too much is at stake.

Regards

David Sandeman
